

Jay Arment

The wolf recovery program hurts livestock producers by being TOO LENIENT on wolves that consistently attack and maim sheep/cattle/horses. It appears that once the pack successfully turns to feed on domestic livestock, this aberrant behavior is quickly assimilated by the entire pack, and becomes a dominant behavior. Confirmed predation by the pack needs to result in lethal control of the that pack, not just one or two members. If wolves and people are to coext, wolf numbers need to be limited more than they are now. It is a matter of public safety.