

Julie Starita

In the past few years, Washington's overly ambitious killing of wolves, such as killing entire packs in response to cattle conflicts, has reduced the growth of wolves to only about 126 confirmed in the state. It should be clear that post-delisting and related hunting discussions need to wait until a rational recovery model is in place.