Dear WA Fish & Wildlife,

As you continue to kill wolves for the Diamond M Ranch, most recently while a judge was telling you not to, it is clearly too early for a post-recovery wolf program. But if you're going to create one, then the highlight should be enhanced nonviolent conflict resolution training for ranchers who graze their cattle on public land. The second priority should be a public awareness campaign for wolf recovery that highlights wolf ecology, behavior and needs taking into account research and work compiled by the Center for Biological Diversity. Please do your jobs with integrity and keep in mind that you're working for us, the citizens — not ranchers.

Thank you,

Melissa
