As a hunter and steward of wildlife conservation, I do not see any reason to not properly manage the wolf population like other wildlife in the post recovery era. Proper management benefits all wildlife in the long term. Predator management is key as well. All populations rely on each other to grow and become stronger. If the population of predator/prey is out of balance it will hurt all wildlife. Not enough prey, the predators will die off. There needs to be balance and management through proper hunting.
