Do you have general comments about the scope of Washington's updated wolf conservation and management plan?

As someone who spends over 100 days a year in the woods, I can tell you that what we have for a management plan is terrible. I see more predators than deer/elk/ and moose. I don't have all the information on the plan at this moment, but I would like to know what we are doing to keep ungulate populations growing in the midst of a fast rising predator population, while still allowing good hunting opportunity for all game species. It is getting harder to hunt in my home state, and we need to look at a full plan, that doesn't just focus on the wolf alone, with the mindset of we need to save wolves at all costs, but look at everything as a whole, including human interaction and hunting.
