Do you have general comments about the scope of Washington's updated wolf conservation and management plan?

I am concerned by the state's rush to delist wolves and develop a "post-recovery" wolf plan, especially in light of the WA Department of Fish and Wildlife's pattern of wolf killing in the same area of prime wolf habitat in the Kettle Range.

I recommend that the state not rush to delist, focusing instead on restoring public trust, relying on the best available science and implementing effective non-lethal alternatives to alleviate wolf-livestock conflicts. The state should also work with federal land management agencies like the US Forest Service to reevaluate grazing allotments in prime wolf habitat – a crucial way to reduce a pattern of ongoing conflicts and wolf killings.

We've paid millions to restore wolves to their original range and I'm exceedingly frustrated that special interests of a very limited group are being put above the investment we've made and public taxpayer support for wolf recovery. Non-lethal means must be explored - they work!
