Re: Oil Discharge Prevention and Contingency Plan Public Scoping Oil Discharge Prevention and Contingency Plan Public Scoping

Dear Mr. Robinson,

Please accept my comments in response to your agency potentially revising oil spill prevention and response rules. I support strengthening these vitally important regulations.

The oil spill prevention and response regulations help ensure that oil stays out of Alaska waters and off of Alaska's coastlines. That's important for:

Alaskans who practice subsistence hunting and fishing and who rely on the ocean as an important source of healthy uncontaminated food, including Indigenous peoples who rely on fish and marine mammals for food security, health and as part of traditional cultural practices dating back thousands of years;

- Commercial fishermen whose livelihoods depend on Alaska's reputation for clean ocean waters;
- Recreational fisherman who come to the state to fish for salmon, halibut and other game fish;
- Tourists who visit Alaska to see the state's outstanding marine wildlife and scenery;
- Residents of Alaska who have a deep connection to the state's waters and coastlines; and
- Wildlife that live in or migrate through Alaska's waters.

Many Alaskans depend directly on a healthy and vibrant marine ecosystem, and all Americans recognize Alaska for its magnificent ocean and coasts. It's in all of our interests to prevent spills and to ensure prompt effective spill response.

If the State of Alaska's Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) chooses to revise the spill prevention and response rules, it should ensure that any proposed changes would not weaken protections that safeguard the marine environment. From subsistence and food security to commercial fisheries and tourism, clean waters and coasts are vital to the state, and DEC should not dilute protections.

If DEC chooses to revise the spill prevention and response rules, it should focus on strengthening protection of the marine environment and adjacent coastal areas. One way to do this would be to take steps to ensure that oil spills do not happen in the first place. When it comes to oil spills in marine waters, prevention is much more effective than response.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Jim Farrell
