

Tyler Little

I as a spill response Tech in the state of Alaska I see and work on the North slope and the difference between the slope in the cooking light is clearly different and I feel that The cook inlet should be just like the North slope they are very strict on every little drop and spills there has to be a certified spill Tech or an organization to clean up those spills and they have to be trained in spill response and I feel that the companies that are there aren't adequate in the cooking line