The thought of wasting more of the states budget on something so unnecessary is gravely concerning.

People have every right to choose where they obtain their food from and the safety of it is to their own judgment.

Tell me how many tubs of hummus or spinach or romaine have been returned because of dangerous bacterias present. And I can still make the choice to buy those products at the risk of that occurring again.

Why would we place the burden on farmers who are trying to increase the self sufficiency of our great state with a ridiculous process such as mentioned.

As a proud Alaskan, I think my self and many, many others would agree the government needs to take a step back and let the citizens who pay for these resources make their own decisions.

Thank you for your time.
