

Dylan Moon

Microreactors promise to free communities from reliance on expensive diesel fuel, offering the resilient power needed to expand economic opportunity. Leading innovation on this technology won't just help Alaska but a great number of countries and places around the world in need of similar nuclear technology.

Developing firm regulations to move the siting process forward is absolutely essential. I offer my support and look forward to seeing this exciting program progress.