

Mark Hinaman

Microreactors will be the most environmentally friendly and safest form of energy generation Alaska could or ever will utilize. There is virtually no environmental or safety risk, and they will lower electricity costs and carbon emissions. They will also increase energy reliability for any area they're deployed. I adamantly support their development, and the rest of Alaska should, too!