

Rachael Gaedeke

Alaska is typically far behind other states when it comes to supporting small food industry businesses. We need to be able to sell raw milk and cheese for example. An income cap on the cottage food law is ridiculous. Let Alaskans make a living. Let them feed their families. This was tough before Covid. Then law makers shut down businesses for months which resulted in a massive loss of income. Many went out of business. This type of regulation is not necessary.