Looks like there is a thorough plan in place. I believe plastic one use containers are out of control. Manufacturers need to take ownership of their wasteful packaging. There is the ability to provide packaging that is compostable. Composting needs to become habitual. But most people need it to be convenient with curbside pick up. I have very little garbage as I don't buy anything with hard plastic packaging and I compost all scraps and recycle glass aluminum and paper products. I also try to recycle some plastics realizing there is not a good stream for them. Keep up the hard work. Another vehicle to use is a company called Terracycle. They have numerous recycling methods for products that otherwise do not get recycled. The state should look into partnering with them. They work with most countries.
