I have concerns that what I am recycling, even when it has the right number on it for recycling is not getting recycled when I hear about how much plastic is found in the ocean and that where the US sends things to be recycled it is not getting recycled but dumped somewhere. But grocery stores package so much stuff in plastic. We need to quit making plastic containers for food so that we don't have to recycle. All the stuff people order delivered to their house has unnecessary packaging. Not everything has to come in plastic. Meat rests on plastic and foam containers. Whatever happened to plain butcher paper? Can we get creative about how food is contained?
