

Scott Mead

We, as a state, should be protective of our sacred natural resources and not adding to the problems by loosening our regulations. We are now at a point where enforcing the existing standards should be the priority. We have too much at stake to allow further damage to our lakes and rivers by allowing a higher level of sulfate to destroy more wild rice beds. Seems the MPCA should be controlling the pollution rather than allowing it.