I do not understand the willingness to ruin business and trash jobs on the Iron Range in order to 'save wild rice'. I don't get it. Have you looked around? Wild rice is doing just fine. It's taking over the bay of the lake where we have our boat. I doubt the water of that lake meets the 10mg/litre sulfate level.

There's no way you can convince me that this level of restriction is even attainable and is anything more than an attempt to ruin mining and other businesses. I think those in charge of imposing this standard ought to be ashamed of themselves. You're willing to kill jobs in order to save a weed that grows out of control all over the Iron Range. Another episode in the "Minnesota is a joke" saga.
