Dear Sir, I am a 37 year pharmacist with Essential Health. I know first hand the difference in old information from new information. The sulfate standards proposed are very old information. The human ingestion limits for sulfates are very much higher than for wild rice! Further it is absolutely true that wild rice does very well in the current sulfate environment. I happen to like wild rice and consider it nutritious to my health and do not hesitate to consume it. Kindest regards , Dennis Greben
