

Mother Nature

Hello, Many comments made during this public comment period point to Riverview being well run and following the Minnesota laws. No reason to argue with that. Many also then mention that because they are following Minnesota's laws, the environmental impact is reasonable. HA! That is where we need to dig a little deeper. Right now Minnesota does not require an Environmental Impact Study. Any time residents/ citizens have been successful (like Baker township 10-15 years ago) in requiring an Environmental Impact Study, Riverview has turned to other communities that are either desperate or lethargic enough to not ask if these feedlots impact their environment. Common sense tells us that this many animals will have an impact, common sense also tells us the milk market does not need more milk. In a scenario like this we are just robbing peter to pay paul. Why not spend the time to see how these short sited economic decisions impact where we live?
