

Travis Miller

I am writing in support of Riverview's West River Dairy expansion. My family has known and worked with the Riverview group for many years and in a variety of different capacities, and we have consistently found them to be professional, responsible, and committed to excellence.

In 2018, Riverview constructed a 10,000-head dairy near Campbell, Minnesota (Campbell Dairy). Since that time, I have seen firsthand the positive economic impact they have brought to the surrounding area. They are a strong economic driver, providing meaningful employment opportunities for local residents and contributing to the overall strength and stability of the rural economy.

Beyond job creation, Riverview adds significant value to local agriculture. Their dairies create an additional, reliable end user for grain, giving farmers more market opportunities and stability. They also help improve the land by putting nutrients back into the soil, which supports healthier, more productive farmland over time.

Another aspect that stands out is how clean, organized, and well-maintained their sites are. Their facilities are operated with a high level of care and attention to detail, reflecting their respect for the land, the community, and the people they work with.

Riverview's team is made up of honest, hardworking, and passionate individuals who take pride in their work and remain mindful of their neighbors and the broader community. They operate with integrity and a clear commitment to doing things the right way.

I firmly believe that Riverview has made the land, roads, schools, and community stronger since establishing operations in our area. They are exactly the kind of neighbor and partner that rural communities benefit from, and I fully support their continued growth and expansion.