

Corey Roberts

For what reason does Riverview need to keep expanding their dairies? They are already running small farmers out of business. The same small dairies that built communities. The same communities that are becoming ghost towns because places like riverview dairies don't support local infrastructure. Veterinary, construction, etc., are done in house and don't support members of local community. They say they create jobs but bring in more illegal immigrants for cheap labor. They use their size and scale to push others around. Basically taking over AMPI (Associated Milk Producers Inc.) and claiming a $2cwt premium over other producers for a "volume discount". With milk prices already where they are, how can other dairy producers compete? With dairies of such scale comes greater risk of pollution as well. Look at the what has already happened when an upright manure silo exploded at the Meadowstar location in Pennock, Mn. Shrapnel of the silo and hundreds of thousands of gallons of liquid manure littered the ground. Not to mention that anybody nearby when that happened would have been killed. Loss of nitrates from such manure spills end up in our water. This affects wildlife and have the potential to lead to cancerous cases, diminishing the quality of life. How can we let systems like this continue to go into place? Riverview does not support local community infrastructure nor are they good for environment.

