

Barbara Kill

We arrived at the informational meeting last week early, only to be turned away with the explanation that the venue was at capacity. There were many others besides us who were disappointed not to be able to be admitted. We were open to hearing what they had to share, but not being able to hear that only deepens our concerns about this expansion in our community. At the very least, a EAW should be conducted to reassure those who are concerned that everything possible is done to circumvent an environmental disaster that could render the surrounding countryside unusable for years. This is just an enormous amount of animals concentrated in far too small an area. I also am deeply concerned that so many smaller family farms will be driven out of business by the massive corporate farms who control a monopoly on the industry.
