The proposed Riverview expansion in Stevens County poses significant environmental and economic harm to the county, its water supply, its environment, its economy and its citizens. The water sources and related ecosystems are fragile already, and this unprecedented expansion threatens the short and long term sustainability of these systems. In addition, small family farms and county residents face economic threats from mega corporate farm operations, negative impacts on water, land and other environmental and economic resources critical to remaining in business and loss of future viability. At the very least, we urge MPCA to require an extensive Environmental Impact Study prior to any consideration of an expansion request of this magnitude.
