It seems that the NMED has already approved this permit, more than once. Why is there so much regulation if they are not going to follow the regulators and requirements? The opposition to the Roper concrete plant just doesn't want the plant in their neighborhood. They've already voiced that they feel another concrete plant is needed in the area but just not at this location. They site health reason and show a huge map of an area of disturbance. Where does this information come from? I'd like to see that map overlaid at the end of Gavilan Canyon Road where the other closest concrete plant is located. There are several residential areas near that concrete plant. The opposition to the Roper concrete plant is basically saying "good for thee but not good for me". This is still America where as long someone follows the laws and regulation, they should be allowed to do what they wish with their own property. Seems to meet all zoning and environmental requirements and so says NMED. What more is there to argue!
