

Gregory Corning

I hope that you, the reader, are in good health and a good frame of mind these days.

The Hazardous Waste Act is the correct law by which to regulate the Radioactive Liquid Waste Treatment Facility (RLWTF). The New Mexico Water Quality Act quite clearly states, for all to see, that it does not have jurisdiction over facilities engaged in treating, storing, or handling hazardous waste in any way.

The New Mexico Environment Department - and no one else - must regulate the RLWTF under the NM Hazardous Waste Act.

By the way, the organizations Honor Our Pueblo Existence and Concerned Citizens for Nuclear Safety must be recognized as having standing in this matter. They are speaking for us citizens, who, after all, every government agency and body works for.

Thank you.

Gregory Corning