

Anonymous Anonymous

As a renter in Albuquerque, I am deeply worried about the plan to force auto dealers to sell fewer gas powered vehicles. There are no charging stations for electrical vehicles in our apartment complex, which is one of the most expensive in Albuquerque, so being forced to buy an electric vehicle would be deeply problematic for us. If this plan goes ahead, when we replace our current vehicles, instead of buying electric cars, if there are few gas powered cars in NM, we would be compelled to go out of state and buy our cars in Texas, Colorado or Arizona. We would rather not do that, but an electric vehicle would create considerable problems for us, so it would be worth the difficulty of traveling out of state to purchase our next vehicles. Please consider the practical implications for renters like us of this policy. Thank you.