

Ginny Larke

What are those of us who make less than $50,000 per year supposed to do when it's time for a new car? We can't afford an EV or even a hybrid at the current prices. We can't afford to have a charging system set up at our homes due to cost. I don't live in a town, so what will I have to do to charge an EV? And all the incentives don't even come close to offsetting the costs. So Governor Lujan-Grisham do you even realize that there are small towns and villages in New Mexico with no charging stations at all? Who will pay to have one put in? There are so many people that you don't know exist, because we don't live in Albuquerque or Santa Fe. Come see for yourself what your mandates and executive orders do for people outside your area. See the actual numbers of your constituents who already have to choose between buying groceries and paying the electric bill. I don't think you really know how most of us in New Mexico actually live. And don't turn us into a smaller version of California.