

Miguel Santistevan

Greetings,

Please adopt the PFAS Firefighting Foam Bill rulemaking. New Mexico should adopt this rulemaking to protect the citizens and the environment. It is not always clear what types and levels of chemicals are in many products. Corporations are not required to disclose and mostly claim 'Confidential Business Information' when asked. So it behooves policy makers to allow the highest level of regulation and have the ability to make rules and inquire about chemical additives that can potentially cause harm to New Mexicans and the environment. The choice to reject this rulemaking will have negative consequences for New Mexican's long-term health, and will create additional costs associated with the remediation of our waters, lands, and agriculture. It is our State's wellbeing that is negatively impacted by chemical pollution. Why would we not retain the authority to make rules for the wellbeing of our people and environment? Make the right choice, don't buckle to industry pressure, but think about what is really important to future generations: cleaner water and a cleaner environment and a government who has the ability to investigate, regulate, and do the right thing.