

Leslie McFadden

Working outdoors on very hot days is dangerous and can lead to heat strokes, and too often death. Yet, many laborers working outdoor in New Mexico's hot summers must deal with such conditions, too often ending up in trips to an emergency room (if one is even nearby). Also, older folks are less able to handle hot temperatures, and too often succumb to heat. Accordingly, I strongly support EIDs proposed regulations re worker heat rules, which now is more important than ever as the current far right conservative US government is decimating the EPA and OSHA regs.