Annual training on heat exposure is of no concern, but with the climate in our area the acclimatization requirement above 80 degrees Fahrenheit is burdensome and completely unnecessary. If an acclimatization requirement is to go into effect the temperature threshold needs to be increased. Again, a training requirement should be sufficient to remind staff of the dangers of heat exposure and they have the ability to make a determination based on the work they are performing if they need to implement a control measure. All injuries and illnesses are already recorded and handled appropriately.
