

Albert Tyson

There should be some regulation around protecting workers in heat related situations. Most employers want to do the right thing, but they have pressure from the profit motive. If some employers are bad actors, the good employers worry that the bad employers will be making more profit. There should be some standards which all employers have to follow in heat related situations, but make it as least burdensome as possible.