I've been building homes in New Mexico year-round for over 20 years. We work in the heat every summer, and we know how to keep our guys safe. This rule is just more government overreach that makes no sense in the real world.

Most of us already give breaks, water, and keep an eye on the crew. We don't need the state telling us how to do what we've been doing forever. Forcing paid breaks and piling on paperwork just slows us down and drives up costs.

Soft times make soft men, and soft men make a weak community. This rule is one more step toward making our state and our people depend on rules instead of responsibility. That's not the New Mexico I want to live in.

Give us something that fits our state, not some one-size-fits-all rule copied from somewhere else.
