The EIB 25-11 rule couldn't be more detrimental to business in New Mexico. This rule will quadruple labor costs for many industries, including the vital construction industry. The inflationary impact of this will hit every New Mexican very hard, best case scenario. Businesses will be forced to move manufacturing of construction materials to other states to compete, construction projects will grind to a halt, and our already taxed transportation system will be negatively impacted due to the extreme length of any road work. This rule doesn't take into account the statistics of heat related injuries in New Mexico, which are non existent.
