This air quality permit request would place undue burden on the people of New Mexico without any clear benefit to the community. The public should be given 60 days to review for adequate time for community engagement. Additionally the environmental and health impacts of this project need to be adequately addressed and the health concerns arise not only from the process itself but the fact that Bloom Energy has a history of dumping hazardous waste illegally. The fact that there is not clear pollution controls is cause for alarm and had to potential to put New Mexicans at risk.
