

Lindsay Kronmiller

The air quality in southern New Mexico, west Texas and Juarez is already abhorrent. There are too many days where we have warnings. Adding yet another data center to the equation affects far more than the Santa Teresa community you're building in. It affects the whole region. Millions of people. Data centers should not be allowed in the desert where it's too hot too cool them. They shouldn't be allowed in places that already have air quality issues due to the environment and industry across the border that can't be controlled. Please stop this data center for the millions on the area who already suffer from poor air quality. This will only make it worse. Please consider the health and well being of the average person over the wealth of a few.