

Jack Armstrong

The creation of data centers is not an issue in my opinion (clearly, I am working on the job). The regulation and responsibility standard of these data centers is what I believe to be so very important.

I see the effort and lengths that Clayco/the owners have gone thru in order to regulate and minimize or fully diminish community water bill increases and water quality. The millions upon millions of dollars committed to making sure that this is done the right way without negatively impacting our surroundings, is enormous. I do believe that the future will be more understanding when it comes to large scale data centers, as long as it is done RIGHT.

Clayco is doing it right. I will always sign off on something that I believe to be innovative AND done the right way/responsibly.

Supported by,
Jack Armstrong