

Benjamin Carvlin

Project Jupiter, by its nature, is anti-human, anti-history, and anti-future. While on the surface, Project Jupiter and others of its ilk, will claim that human beings will only prosper as a result of their practices, it is obvious to anyone who thinks about the subject for any serious length of time, that people will become dumber, will lose swaths of jobs (eventually), and will fall deeper into becoming vassals of Corporate America (and thus the state). It is anti- history. This land has been occupied by Americans for over 100 years at this point. Families and businesses have been started, generations of traditions have been formulated. The land Project Jupiter wishes to destroy is, of course, just land to the big wigs in charge, but for the people you claim to represent, it is home. And more than anything else, it is anti-future. Let me paint a picture: A man and woman drive to their new job maintaining the land and operations of one of the many data centers that have ruined the land their family once settled. They started this job because their prestigious career in writing was eliminated in favor of AI language models who can do their job (minus any heart and soul) for a fraction of the cost (only a few thousand gallons of clean drinking water!). They spend 8 hours making a marginal wage in a job they couldn't care less about so they can make ends meet in a country that has been invaded by corporate greed and third world cheap labor. Their homeland is unrecognizable, but at least they have their family. They get home (a home in a neighborhood of 500 identical properties on .1 acre plots the occupants could never imagine owning. They rent from the very employers who cut their checks.)

They check in on their children, who, of course, their mom would love to stay home and raise, but they need two incomes to survive. They see their kids finishing their homework. However, they're not doing the work, they simply plug it into the newest chat engine that they've been convinced to use. It spits out their answer in seconds, they upload their document to their online portal where their AI instructor grades it. It's an A+! They are 4.0 students, who, of course, have spent 13 years of education learning nothing at all. But their grades don't matter anyway. What field are they going to get into? Art? Music? Accounting? No. Those are all gone. It's time to roll up your sleeves and follow in your parents' footsteps and maintain the data center grounds. They must work hard to keep their lives afloat. But what kind of life are they leading anyway? One of no interest, no artistic prowess, no passion. They are just a cog in the machine to help transform a country their ancestors once recognized as a fresh start for their native people and human civilization as a whole to one where you own nothing, you have no family, you have no community, and dammit you'll be happy about it!