The absolute tipping point for climate disaster is in eleven years. Not 50, not 20, but a decade. If you think that a climate disaster wouldn't affect you, maybe because you're rich, or "humans are very adaptable", you're dead wrong. We humans are animals. We aren't gods. We depend on the stability of the environment just as much as every other living thing. But we need data centres to generate ai cats. Right. I guess you just shouldn't listen to me if you think chat gpt is worth the lives of your children and grandchildren. I guess it doesn't matter if they have a slow and excruciating death. I mean, those ai companies REALLY needed more data centres. If we continue to let ai centres be opened despite the incoming climate disaster, the tipping could be cut in half. If you care about the lives of your children, you would do something. We can't afford to be cowards.
