

Sophie Starler

Sophie Starler

The development of AI centers in my hometown is a terrifying thought, the Rio Grande flora and fauna already suffer and the drought will affect all New Mexican residents as well. Using public land to support the extreme-wealthy will only harm our economy, as well as the unique ecosystems that thrived in the areas that are now being flattened and buried under concrete. The happiness and future prosperity of both New Mexican residents as well as our land depends on maintaining our public land, and limiting water consumption from megacorps, so that our state may thrive.

