As someone who passes by the Rio grande river daily, I think it sucks that it's consistently been completely dry for so long. Allowing the collaboration between microgrids and data centers, where they would require our citizens' clean water to be drained from our system, would only make things worse and continue to leave more of our state's areas completely dry. As a desert, we struggle enough already to provide adequate water for our communities and I don't want to see multiple communities, including my own, suffering from the water quality or supply they do/don't receive all because of a cash grab. We do not need a data center here. What we need is to be able to access the resources we need for survival, and to not waste the limited supply we have on unnecessary BS that just might make someone a blind (unnecessary) profit.
