

Teresa Mendoza

Project Jupiter should not receive an air quality permit to build a data center in the New Mexico southwest. The massive data center will increase air pollution causing health risks to residents in the region and the vulnerable water resource should be protected from residents and habitats to survive. New Mexico cannot allow big tech companies deplete local natural resources but instead look into ways to protect them for future generations.