Project Jupiter's building plan is bigger than any plant they've built before, 1000 times larger than any previous project, and is calculated to produce massive dangerous amounts of hazardous waste, AND has a history of illegally storing, dumping and transporting hazardous waste! How is this project not going to be totally out of control? Who is really checking and regulating such activity that will cause such a large carbon footprint?

The consumption of water to be able to power this is also just unrealistic, will be in danger when it's already a scarcity in this state
