

Paulene Cordova

Our state is already in a drought, and prone to wildfires. Sucking water from farmlands, people and already precious life forces for an unnecessary data center is the antithesis to New Mexico's way of life. Leave the precious, untouched land and what little water we have left alone. We have also never fully addressed the silver mines in Pecos and nuclear testing site in the south that already is affecting our population. We don't need more toxic chemicals harming our communities.