

Hoka Skenandore

Project Jupiter made it's first mistake by assuming it would be able to add an unwanted data center to a desert that already has limited water for many communities. The next mistake was attempting to name the project after a local indigenous Nation, who called this blunder out. There have been multiple reports of underhanded tactics to gain support for this unneeded and unwanted, problematic project. The impact on rural communities will never be offset by temporary jobs, nor by increased power usage and pollution, to say nothing of the water wasted, even with the false promise of clean energy. New Mexicans don't want this, I don't want this, and I don't want the environmental impacts to hurt future generations. I adamantly oppose this project.
