I have a hard time expressing enough vehement disapproval of Project Jupiter and its presence in the borderlands - morally, environmentally, and based on evidence, science, and research. There is a reason that scientists, environmentalists, and land stewards are pushing back on this project's continued expansion, and I am hopeful that these public comments will show how disastrous the community believes this project to be. New Mexico is a state that has sought to govern and protects its land from predators - I hope it continues to do so with the rejection of this permit, and listens to the voices of those who are sending a warning message.
