

Antoinette Lucero

New Mexico is feeling the affects of climate change heavily, especially where our water is concerned. We are a desert, yet they wanna take the water our agriculture and the people depend on to live. They wanna pollute our air when we are one of the few states with very clean air. And the only reason I can see is that our lives, livelihood, and our ecosystems matter far less than making the rich richer. No matter how "green" the proposal sounds, they have not reduced the impact to any kind of degree that would not significantly impact New Mexicans for generations. My people have been here for at least tens of thousands of years... this would be, by far, one of the greatest tragedies of mass proportions.