

Jibreel Muhammad

New Mexico is already in a terrible drought, and the Rio Grande river is dried up all of the way through Albuquerque. These data centers will use up our already-scarce water, and drive up energy prices for everyone, and its incredibly shortsighted to allow another in our state right now. We should be demanding that these data centers produce their own electricity by building more power infrastructure, and not allow them to touch a single drop of our water.