

Shaunasy McCarty

New Mexico is a beautiful desert state with so many more things to offer it other than a giant data center taking our natural resources. We've been in a drought since the state was created, and with data centers using MILLIONS of gallons of fresh water, we would have practically no more left for the people who actually live here. NM residents should be given proper notice when companies try to bypass air quality laws (as this center would also deplete our already low air quality) and the proper hearings/meetings with the public should be held, as we are the ones being directly impacted by the actions these types of companies. Please do not allow this building to take water that we barely have now from people who need it.