

Matthew Winter

New Mexico's residents are facing unprecedented threats in the form of drought, forest fires and heat waves. Data centers act to directly increase the severity of these threats, and with few benefits for the communities they harm. Any elected official that truly cares about the citizens of New Mexico must prioritize ensuring that people have access to clean drinking water and oppose data centers. We can't afford to further destroy the environment so that a few wealthy individuals can profit off of the suffering of the people of New Mexico.