

Valeria Barron

The Rio Grande is dying out. The water that has sustained our people, our cultures, the wildlife that has lives and should live for thousands of years is dying out.

The world that our children, grandchildren and whatever descendants we may have is going to be nothing but a dry, barren wasteland of sand and bones. And for what? So people that have never seen a day in our lives can spend resources that they would never have to touch otherwise had it not been to make a profit?

This was the warmest winter we have ever had in our lifetimes. Temperatures hardly reached below 40° when just a few years back we would spend at least a week in the low 20°s.

Not to mention the rampant lies, and how they refuse to allow anyone who openly opposes them in the room. Lying about the hours of their meetings. Purposefully leaving pages of information blank so that way they "technically" don't have data on how harmful their data center will be. But the public already knows. We understand that a location using 20,000 gallons of water was a problem when we all struggle to have water in the first place. But one million gallons of water? Anyone would view that as an attempt at mass extinction of the local population.

Now, I've already made this too long, but there is one more thing I would like to add. In one of the meetings, the team behind project Jupiter openly admitted to using part of their 165 million dollars to bribe the people in charge of keeping New Mexico safe. They said they would return with the numbers of how much they used to bribe the government of New Mexico. They have not returned with those numbers.