

Ada Salazar

As a resident of an already drought-prone area, i firmly protest the existence of data centers. Projects like Project Jupiter will not only destory our environment, but also split apart communities and further the gap between rich and poor areas. If your idea of progressing society economically consists of making lower income areas absolutely inhabitable, then you are bound to run yourself into the ground and ruin our environment completely. How do you expect to gather support and recruit employees if the only people who would ever work for you are people of the working class? What will you do when you have completely polluted communities, destroyed air quality, and effectively ruined the lives of everyone who would ever even think about working for you? For the sake of everyone, including yourselves, do not go through with this project. Deny the air quality permit, allow the communities that you are effecting with this project to give their opinions on it, and actually do your jobs for once. Sincerely, the entire working class and all nearby communities of data centers.